

Lashes come off

There's a few things that can cause lashes to fall off. I'll go through them:-

Incorrect preparation - if the natural lashes are not cleansed thoroughly with a lash cleanser containing no oils the lashes won't stick properly to the natural lash. A primer can be used after cleansing to obtain a better bond.

Not enough glue - you will need to dip $\frac{3}{4}$ of a classic lash in to the glue so you must hold it at the tip. Russian volumes hold more glue so you only need to dip $\frac{1}{3}$ of the lash in.

Too much glue - using too much glue will cause the lashes to clump. You must make sure that you tap (not wipe) off every bead of glue or they will clump together and come off in days.

Keep the lashes away from the skin - there must be a 1-2mm gap at the base of the lash extensions. The eyelid needs room to open. Not leaving a gap can cause irritation of the eyelids and the opening of the eyes can cause the lashes to droop, feel heavy or come off.

Combing is key - you must comb as you move to each eye EVERY TIME as they will stick together, clump and come off. The process is "comb, 3 in, next eye and repeat"

And finally.... shake your glue thoroughly - if you do not have a shaker you will need to shake your glue vigorously for 10-15 minutes to ensure the chemicals are mixed together correctly.

If all the above has been thoroughly followed you'll need to take your clients through the after care sheet to ensure they are not causing the lashes to come off themselves. It is important to eliminate any faults with your technique before you do this. Analyse what you do using the list above and if you're still having trouble get in touch and we will try to assist further. Leanne
